Group of topics 20.06.2017
Förderungen | Strategien zur Gebäudebegrünung

Language Englisch

Content London is a green city with an extensive network of parks and green spaces. However, the population of the city is expected to grow from 8.5 million to over 11 million by 2050. Consequently the city will become denser and more compact. This requires us to green buildings and streets if we are going to provide all citizens with access to green space and to address issues of climate change and ecological resilience. London has developed a policy framework to address these issues, but will need to improve and refine these policies and develop suitable incentives to make an even greener city in the future

The lecture will describe the current policies the London Plan (the city's spatial planning document), how these policies might change during the forthcoming review of the London Plan, and the publication of the new London Environment Strategy.
